Old-Fashioned Christmas Days.

Those old-fashioned Christmas days!
How the sun of memory plays
Round them when we sit alone
Thinking of the times agone.
Wood and field and vine and tree
Clad in robes of purity—
Robes of snow of spotless white
That came down in flakes as light
From the gray old skies above
As the down on breast of dove.
Farmhouse standing by the lane,
Outside weatherworn and plain,
But within a home of cheer
Ruled by good old mother dear.
Fireplace yawning over there,
Near it mother's rocking chair,
And the old split-bottom dad
Thought a throne of comfort. (Sad
Now to think those treasures may
In some loft be hid away
Crippled; joints all shaken loose
Till they're of no further use.)
Bright flames dancing merrily
Up the chimney as in glee,
Licking at the big back-log,
On the hearth the old house dog
Lying in a lazy heap
With the old cat fast asleep
Up against his shaggy breast—
Picture of contented rest.
Mother and the girls out there
In the great big kitchen, where
Doughnuts, pies and sugar cakes,
(Nothing like these modern fakes),
And the Christmas puddings wait,
Smoking hot, their coming fate,
And the best of all—the prize—
In the oven roasting lies,
Gobbling victim of the block—
Pick of all the barnyard flock.
Then we hear the welcome call:
"Dinner's ready, folks! Come all!"
And that dinner! Master mine!
Seemed just heavenly—divine!
Rack the brain from roof to base
Hunting words to fit the case.
O the rhymester who could tell
Of its glorious goodness— Well,
He's a better one than I.
So there is no use to try.

They sat on the bank of a murmuring stream
At night,
A goosey-brained man and a maidenly dream—
That's right!
He fondled and kissed her and squeezed at her
waist,
The guy!
And when the sweet dew of her lips he would taste
He'd sigh.
He called her his darling, his fountain of bliss,
His duck,
Punctuating his speeches with many a kiss,
Kerchuck!
And he kept the thing up till the only spectator
Ycleep
The man in the moon, hid his face in a crater
And wept!
